RB Tyrone Tracy totaled 97 scrimmage yards (79 rushing, 18 rushing) and two touchdowns on 18 touches (5.4 ypt).

Serious Injuries Week 15

Kansas City Chiefs QB Patrick Mahomes

Mahomes exited after suffering a left knee injury late in the fourth quarter of a 16-13 home loss to the Los Angeles Chargers. He finished 16-of-28 passing for 189 yards and one interception.

Following the Chiefs' loss, head coach Andy Reid said the "injury didn't look good." Unfortunately for Mahomes and Kansas City fans, he was correct. The three-time Super Bowl champion tore his ACL.

This makes the Chiefs' disastrous season even worse, as they have already been eliminated from the playoffs. Two-time league MVP Mahomes has been one of the positives for the fading dynasty this season. Entering Week 15, he ranked third in the league in passing yards (3,398) and was tied for fifth in passing touchdowns (22).

Backup QB Gardner Minshew is now set to replace Mahomes. The Chiefs (6-8) should continue to struggle with him as the starter. They're only a 3.5 favorite this week against the lowly Titans, so oddsmakers believe the same. The former Jacksonville Jaguar has a 17-29 record as a starter over seven seasons. Against L.A., he went 3-of-5 passing for 22 yards and one interception.

Green Bay Packers DE Micah Parsons

Parsons suffered a non-contact left knee injury late in the third quarter of a 34-26 loss to the Denver Broncos on the road while chasing QB Bo Nix. He was subsequently ruled out of the game.

Empower Field at Mile High in Denver doesn't include an MRI room, so Parsons went elsewhere to undergo testing. The Packers stated the star pass-rusher has torn his ACL and is out for the season.

That's a massive loss for the Packers (9-4-1), who are in a NFC North race with the Bears (10-4).

The Packers acquired Parsons in a blockbuster trade with the Dallas Cowboys before the start of the season, and he has proved worth the asking price. Entering Week 15, he was tied for third in the league in sacks (12.5) with Broncos LB Nik Bonitto.

Green Bay Packers WR Christian Watson

In the same quarter Parsons suffered his injury, Watson exited with a chest issue. He finished with three receptions for 29 yards.

The injury occurred when Broncos cornerback Patrick Surtain II landed on top of the wideout on a deep pass from QB Jordan Love. Per The Athletic/Bleacher Report contributor James Palmer, the WR left the stadium in an ambulance.

In his postgame news conference, Packers head coach Matt LaFleur didn't provide a detailed update on Watson but confirmed Palmer's report. It could be another unlucky break for the WR, who has struggled to stay healthy throughout his career. He already missed six games this season after recovering from an ACL tear suffered in 2024.

When healthy, Watson is one of the Packers' more explosive playmakers. Entering Sunday, the fourth-year WR was averaging 18.1 yards per reception, the second-best mark of his career.

Los Angeles Rams WR Davante Adams

During the fourth quarter of the Rams' 41-34 win over the Detroit Lions, Adams suffered a non-contact left hamstring injury while running a route on a deep pass. He finished with four receptions for 71 yards on nine targets.

Rams HC Sean McVay sounded pessimistic about Adams' injury. He told the media, "It doesn't look good."

Adams' hamstring injury has been a nagging issue. He was listed on the team's injury report this week and didn't practice on Wednesday and Thursday.

Puka Nacua remains the Rams WR1, but Adams has quietly been having one of the best seasons of his career. In his first 13 games, the 12th-year WR had 14 touchdown catches, tied for the second most in his career.

Houston Texans RB Woody Marks

Marks suffered an ankle injury in the first quarter of Houston's 40-20 win over the Arizona Cardinals. The rookie out of Southern California briefly returned but sat out for most of the second half. He had seven carries for 30 yards.

Texans head coach DeMeco Ryans indicated Woods' injury isn't a huge concern. In a postgame news conference, the coach admitted he could've returned to the game had it been closer.

The Texans should monitor Woods' health for the rest of the season. The 5-foot-10, 208-pound RB has already battled knee and ankle issues. Houston needs him to remain healthy down the stretch. Entering Week 15, he led the team in rushing yards, with 554.

Carolina Panthers +3 vs Tampa Bay

This matchup sets up as a classic divisional spot where the market continues to price Tampa Bay as the more reliable side, even though the on-field gap between these teams has quietly narrowed over the last month. Carolina has played far more competitive football than the public perception suggests, especially within the division, and this is a spot where matchup, situational dynamics, and game flow all tilt toward the home underdog.

Carolina's offensive approach has stabilized, leaning into ball control and efficiency rather than trying to win shootouts they aren't built for. That matters against a Tampa Bay defense that has struggled to get off the field against teams willing to stay patient and grind. The Panthers' ability to sustain drives limits Tampa Bay's possessions and keeps the game inside a one-score window, which is exactly what you want when grabbing points in a divisional game.

Defensively, Carolina has been much more disciplined at home, particularly against the run. Tampa Bay's offense is at its best when it can stay balanced and avoid obvious passing situations. When forced into longer third downs, protection issues and stalled drives have shown up repeatedly. Carolina's front has quietly done a strong job of keeping contain and forcing opponents to earn yards underneath rather than giving up chunk plays.

This is also a situational fade on Tampa Bay. The Buccaneers have struggled when laying points on the road, particularly in games where they're expected to dictate tempo. When opponents refuse to speed the game up, Tampa Bay has shown a tendency to tighten up offensively and leave the door open late. Carolina doesn't need to dominate this game — they simply need to keep it uncomfortable and within reach, which fits their current identity perfectly.

Divisional familiarity, home field, and a spread of a field goal make this a strong value spot for the Panthers. TAKE: Carolina +3

New York Giants at Minnesota — UNDER 45

This total is inflated relative to how these teams are actually playing football, not how the market expects them to play on paper. Minnesota's offense has been inconsistent in converting yardage into points, while the Giants' approach continues to lean conservative, especially in recent weeks. That combination creates a strong setup for a lower-scoring game that stays under the radar.

Minnesota prefers a methodical pace, leaning on field position and defense rather than forcing tempo. That style naturally suppresses totals, especially when facing an opponent that struggles to generate explosive plays. The Giants' offense has had difficulty sustaining drives without mistakes, and that becomes even more pronounced against disciplined defensive fronts that don't over-pursue.

From a matchup standpoint, this game profiles as one with plenty of short drives, punts, and clock-draining possessions. Both teams are comfortable taking points when they're available rather than pushing the envelope on fourth downs, which matters greatly for totals in the mid-40s. Long possessions that end in field goals instead of touchdowns are a recipe for an under, particularly in a game where neither side is likely to chase points early.

Weather, venue, and game script also lean under. Minnesota is comfortable slowing things down on the road, protecting leads rather than extending them, while the Giants have shown little interest in opening things up unless they're forced to. That reduces the likelihood of the kind of shootout stretch needed to clear this number.

Unless turnovers create short fields — something neither offense has consistently capitalized on — this game projects to stay controlled and methodical from start to finish.

TAKE: Giants/Vikings UNDER 45

Los Angeles Chargers +1.5 at Dallas

This line has flipped since opening lines were released. This is a spot where perception and reality are slightly misaligned. Dallas continues to draw strong market support at home, but the Chargers match up well stylistically and enter this game with the tools needed to control tempo and field position. Getting points with a team capable of winning outright is the type of edge that holds long-term value.

The Chargers' offense is built around efficiency, not volume. They don't need explosive play counts to move the ball, which helps neutralize Dallas' pass rush. When protection holds and drives stay on schedule, Dallas' defense has shown vulnerability to sustained possessions that wear them down over four quarters.

Defensively, Los Angeles is well equipped to limit Dallas' biggest strength — quick scoring bursts. By keeping plays in front and forcing longer drives, the Chargers reduce the likelihood of momentum swings that typically fuel Dallas at home. This also shortens the game and keeps every possession meaningful late, which favors the team taking points.

There's also a strong situational angle here. Dallas has struggled to separate from competent opponents, often allowing games to remain tighter than expected. The Chargers thrive in these environments, where execution and patience matter more than raw explosiveness.

In a game projected to come down to the final possession, grabbing points with the more controlled team is the correct side. TAKE: LA Chargers +1.5

Houston Texans -14.5 vs Las Vegas

This is a clear mismatch both statistically and situationally. Houston is playing with purpose, efficiency, and consistency, while Las Vegas continues to struggle on both sides of the ball, particularly in protection and defensive depth. Large spreads always require caution, but this one is justified by matchup and game flow.

Houston's offense has shown the ability to score efficiently without needing excessive possessions. That's critical when laying a big number. Sustained drives, red-zone efficiency, and a willingness to keep pressure on opponents prevent the kind of backdoor scenarios that typically kill favorites.

Las Vegas, meanwhile, has been unable to protect consistently or generate stops when opponents commit to balanced game plans. That puts them at risk of falling behind early and being forced into uncomfortable offensive situations. When trailing, Las Vegas becomes one-dimensional, which has led to turnovers and stalled drives — exactly what you want when backing a large favorite with an opportunistic defense.

Defensively, Houston has the advantage of being able to dictate terms. By limiting explosive plays and forcing longer drives, they increase the likelihood that Las Vegas settles for minimal points even when crossing midfield. That combination of offensive sustained offense and defensive containment is how favorites cover numbers of this size.

Houston doesn't need to run up the score — they simply need to remain efficient and avoid mistakes. Against this opponent, that's a reasonable expectation. TAKE: Houston -14.5

PRO FOOTBALL QUICK PICKS

LA Rams at Seattle

Line: Seattle +0.5, O/U 44.5

This matchup profiles as more open offensively than the market expects. Both teams are comfortable throwing on early downs, and neither defense has been reliable at preventing chunk plays. Seattle's home games have consistently played faster than perception, particularly when opponents are willing to push tempo. The Rams are not a ball-control team in these spots and will stay aggressive. With efficiency on both sides and red-zone opportunities likely, the total is undervalued.

TAKE: Rams/Seahawks OVER 44.5

Philadelphia at Washington

Line: Philadelphia -6, O/U 45.5

Philadelphia remains the more complete team, especially in the trenches, where Washington has struggled against physical fronts. This is a spot where the Eagles can control game flow with sustained drives and limit Washington's possessions. When Philadelphia has been able to dictate tempo, opponents have had trouble keeping pace late. Laying points is justified given the matchup edge up front.

TAKE: Philadelphia -6

Green Bay at Chicago

Line: Green Bay -1.5, O/U 46.5

Chicago games have quietly trended higher-scoring when facing opponents willing to throw early and often. Green Bay fits that profile and won't hesitate to attack mismatches in the secondary. Chicago's offense has also been more aggressive at home, particularly on scripted drives. With both teams capable of creating explosive plays, this total is set too low.

TAKE: Packers/Bears OVER 46.5

Buffalo at Cleveland

Line: Buffalo -10, O/U 43.5

Buffalo is clearly the superior team, but this setup favors a slower, more grind-heavy game than the spread suggests. Cleveland's offense struggles, yet their approach shortens games and limits total possessions. Buffalo is content to protect leads rather than press tempo once ahead. That combination suppresses scoring opportunities late.

TAKE: Bills/Browns UNDER 43.5

Kansas City at Tennessee

Line: Kansas City -3.5, O/U 37.5

This total is extremely low, but Tennessee's defensive issues make it difficult to justify an under at this number. Kansas City remains efficient even when not explosive, and Tennessee's offense has been more functional than the market acknowledges. Short fields or a defensive lapse would immediately threaten this number. There's little margin for error at 37.5.

TAKE: Chiefs/Titans OVER 37.5

NY Jets at New Orleans

Line: New Orleans -4.5, O/U 41

This game sets up as a controlled, defense-first contest. Neither offense plays with consistent pace, and both coaching staffs are comfortable settling for field position rather than forcing action. Long drives that stall out have been common for both teams. With limited explosive-play upside, the under is the sharper angle.

TAKE: Jets/Saints UNDER 41

Minnesota at NY Giants

Line: Minnesota -3, O/U 44.5

Minnesota has a clear edge in offensive efficiency and defensive discipline. The Giants struggle to sustain drives against structured defenses and are prone to falling behind early. Minnesota doesn't need to dominate — they simply need to stay clean and let the matchup work in their favor. This is a reasonable spot to lay a short number.

TAKE: Minnesota -3

Cincinnati at Miami

Line: Miami +1.5, O/U 51

This total assumes near-peak offensive output from both sides, which hasn't consistently materialized. Miami's offense has been uneven, and Cincinnati has leaned more conservative in road environments. Extended drives without explosive finishes are likely, especially early. The number is inflated relative to expected efficiency.

TAKE: Bengals/Dolphins UNDER 51

Jacksonville at Denver

Line: Denver -3, O/U 45.5

Denver continues to be undervalued at home, particularly against offenses that struggle with pressure. Jacksonville has shown vulnerability when forced into longer down-and-distance situations. Denver's ability to control the line of scrimmage gives them a strong chance to win outright. Laying a field goal is acceptable here.

TAKE: Denver -3

Atlanta at Arizona

Line: Atlanta -2.5, O/U 46.5

Atlanta's recent performances suggest a widening gap between perception and actual on-field execution. Arizona has struggled to contain balanced offenses and gives up sustained drives too easily. Atlanta doesn't need to win pretty — they just need to remain structured and avoid turnovers. This is a favorable spot to lay a short number.

TAKE: Atlanta -2.5

Pittsburgh at Detroit

Line: Detroit -7, O/U 49.5

Detroit's offensive efficiency at home has forced opponents into uncomfortable game scripts. Pittsburgh's offense is not built to trade scores, which increases the likelihood of Detroit separating late. Once Detroit gains control, they are aggressive in closing games. Laying the touchdown makes sense in this matchup.

TAKE: Detroit -7

New England at Baltimore

Line: Baltimore -2.5, O/U 48.5

This number suggests a higher-scoring game than Baltimore typically allows when controlling tempo. New England's offense struggles against disciplined coverage units, and Baltimore is content to slow things down when ahead. Sustained drives without explosive finishes favor the under.

TAKE: Patriots/Ravens UNDER 48.5

San Francisco at Indianapolis

Line: San Francisco -6.5, O/U 46.5

Indianapolis has quietly been far more competitive at home than the market credits, and this matchup sets up better than the spread suggests. San Francisco still carries public respect, but this is not the same dominant road profile once pace slows and possessions become more valuable. Indianapolis has shown the ability to shorten games, limit explosive plays, and stay within one score when catching points in controlled environments. With the number north of a field goal, the value is on the home side to absorb pressure and keep this tight into the fourth quarter.
